In 1931, Irving Zaslow founded Jaffe's Art Linens, a Philadelphia retail store that grew into ATD-AMERICAN. Over the years, ATD has become an international manufacturer and distributor of thousands of items including furniture, linens, and clothing.

Change is constant, but one element that remains the same is their reliance upon "old-fashioned" business principles that will never go out of style. Personal accountability, caring, and hard work are the values ingrained in ATD's culture and are the foundation of its superior service and quality.

ATD has been doing business internationally for 14 years, and credits approximately 15% of their sales to international business. The company exports to more than 50 countries; however, it is always looking to expand business.

“ We believe a free trade agreement with Colombia would be as large a benefit to us as have NAFTA and CAFTA have had for both our furniture and textile businesses, ” says Timothy Voit, international sales manager.
